I knew it when I heard my own music coming out of my Mac.

 My own music. At that moment I knew I wanted to do this. I knew I wanted to get better. It made me curious. It made it clear for me.

 I remember being asked by the San Fernando Education technology, a couple of summers ago, to consider re-recording the Star Wars music for the Star Wars-themed student film festival. My teacher asked me to give them a Mariachi feel. Jazz em up. To put chile on them. I was excited they asked me to be part of something. But, there was a problem.

 I had never seen the movies so within a few days, I saw the movies, listened to the music, got their names, went online and bought the sheet music for the songs.

 I re-arranged the tempo of the main Theme song from Star Wars to fit with in the mariachi time structure. I recorded every instrument one at a time. I think, in the end, there were about 20 instruments I used. All by myself.

 I couldn't stop there. I had to keep recording. I recorded 4 more songs (when I was only asked for one). This was so cool!!! Since school was not a priority for me, I knew I had to work harder at this.

 When I heard myself playing through the computer, I knew it, I'd never be the same.
